My supplier has given me a company name "Syrinx Telecom" for a product, "T500QA/Q-BNC". This is the same as I have been using. My question is: Is there a program that I can use to repair the product? A phone book will be more than helpful. I'm a former phone tech who took 20 years off from it. I'm presently a welder. I'm learning a whole new way to do things. Any help in either direction would be much appreciated. Thank You. I have the same problem - deactivating S7-200 is a jolly difficult operation. Please help me to understand what is going on with my model. The password I received is from a company I have never heard of. How do I disable a system remotely and with an external cable (I've tried a CAT cable)? I have S7200 and I'm a beginner at china telecom. can someone help me with my problem, please? 1) when I try to activate with an external cable the computer informs me that "it is not possible to activate the device". 2) when I try to activate with a phone or a PC with siemens utility the device is "already activated" and I cannot deactivate it. 3) the model is CPU226 - what is it? a set top box? a Cable modem? a router? 4) I need to "uninstall/deconfigure software" - but I don't understand what this exactly means - can someone help me? Also, I am not able to find the manual of the device - it seems to be impossible to find it in china... I am not an expert at all, but if you go to click on Model S7-200, the version you are working on, and you should find a model number. An active serial number is also needed if you have a lost serial number. However, if you have a lost serial number, the best thing to do is to go to your distribution center. It will most likely be listed in the yellow pages. When you go there, you will ask for the model name. Once you have that, ask the sales rep for the same serial number that you have, and they will be able to tell you 8215746af
